Enid Ng Lim is a native-born San Franciscan who grew up in Chinatown. She cared a lot about the well-being of the people in her community. She was able to bring two new Muni bus lines to run through Chinatown, got lights and railings placed in the Stockton Street Tunnel, and helped shield a senior housing facility from office development. Enid worked at the Chinatown Community Development Center where she was responsible for environmental issues, transportation, traffic, and community fundraising. She helped create a street sweeping and cleanup program for Chinatown and every Chinese New Year. Due to Enid's activism, her "village" has become a city where endless services are provided to its residents.
